Mr. Mitterrand and the country now face some difficult weeks ahead. The president-elect con-fronts a hostile, center-right major-ity in the Naconal Assembly. He has said he will call new elections next month in the expectation that a oew majority will emerge to support his programs. If that gamble fails, an institutional crisis may result, because France, under the poitical system fashiooed by De Gaulle io 1958, has never experienced a situation in which the president and the National Assembly were at odds.

By Richard Eder

New York Times Sernce PARIS - For 37 years Francois Mitterrand has pursued his zigzag and unpredictable course in French politics. In effect, he has had three political careers, and the first two were unremarkable and not very successful.

His triumph Sunday, in American terms, would be remotely as if Harold Stassen had returned to public life 10 years ago, become a Democrat, revitalized the party, and woo last November's presidential election.

Mr. Mitterrand was one of the blur of office-sbufflers in the postwar Fourth Republic, whose governments rose and fell irregularly, but often. He caught most of the political diseases of the time, such as affirming that the only policy to be followed toward the Algerian nationalists was war and participating dutifully in the constop process of political intrigues and swaps that came to be called the waltz of the Cabinets. He held posts in 11 governments between 1947 the left. He did well, but lost. In 1971, after the Socialist Party had dropped to an abys-mal 5 percent of the vote, it held a conference to decide its future. Mr. Mitterrand turned up with a proposal for a united left that might some day wrench the Fifth Republic from what seemed to be the perpetual control of the right.

Precarious Vision

The vision seemed precarious, and Mr. Mitterrand did not even beloog to the party. Nevertheless, there were no better ideas around, so he was made a party member and the party leader all at the same time. If he had lost Sunday against

Valery Giscard d'Estaing, as he did seven years ago, he still would have accomplished some-strength it has known. The Communists dropped to 15 percent of the electorate in the first round of the elections two weeks ago, and the Socialists grew to 26 percent. Political Style Mr. Mitterrand was able to tell the French that for the first time in the history of the Fifth Republic there was a strong and plausible democratic alternative on the left. There are questions ahead about the strength, but the French electorate bought the plausibility. The man who has done this Part of both the puzzlement and the distrust is political: his history is too long and has had too many turnings to let him be pinned down. His encmies call him an opportunist or worse; his admirers speak of a man of a private and idiosyn-cratic loyalty to his own sense of

Spanish Civil Guards Kill 3 Suspected ETA Youths The Associated Press

ALMERIA, Spain - Civil Guards and three youths suspected of belonging to the Basque separatist organization ETA exchanged gunfire Sunday near Almeria, in southern Spain, and the youths were killed, pobce reported.

They did not indicate what prompted the gunlight, nor did they provide details. On Thursday, the head of the military household of King Juan Carlos was wounded and three army officers were killed when terrorists bombed their car in Madrid. ETA claimed responsibility for the attack, which also wounded several passersby. Police also reported that on Sat-

By James M. Markham New York Times Service

MADRID -- Two-and-a-half months after a military potsch nearly felled Spain's infant democracy, politicians, journalists and other public figures have become gloomy, edgy and demoralized, holding their breath as if waiting for the next blow. The fright created by the February attack on the Cortes (par-liament), which was held hostage for 18 hours, has altered some basic assumptions of Spain's politics.

Last week, a spasm of terrorist violence, one of the most horrifying since the death of Franco in 1975, deepened the pessimism. In separate attacks in the same fashionable Madrid neighborhood, a general, a colonel, two soldiers and a policeman were assassinated by bullets and a powerful bomb; 15 bystanders were injured, some seriously, in the two assaults. In Barcelona, two Civil Guards were coolly assassinated in a bar by two youths.

A Common Goal The back-to-back outbreaks of terror were the work of the Basque group ETA and a shadowy, supposedly leftist organization known as GRAPO, which has been varioushy accused of being infiltrated by rightist po-licemen and the Soviet KGB. The Basque group failed to kill its main target, Lt. Gen. Joaquin Valenzuela, head of King Juan Carlos' military household, although he was seriously wounded.

oess on a number of issues, but has treated the military with kid gloves, eager to avoid offending "the sleeping lion." Most of the 288 Civil Guards who were arrested for joining Lt. Col. Antonio Tejero's assault on the Cortes on Feb. 23 have been released. A statement from the Civil Guard command said that the "infraction" committed by the men permitted them to be held for only two months. Many Spaniards have begun to wonder whether Col. Tejero, not to mention three senior generals charged with him, will eventually be found guilty of nothing more than an "infraction." Their court-martial looms as a watershed in Spain's uncertain transition to democracy. Within the government, some ministers favor putting off the trial for as long as possible, while others contend that delay would simply confirm the impression that the civilians are terrified of their own army.

Tejero's accusations against him. The court-martial could multiply this sort of episode, putting the military in a volatile and rebellious mood.

Gloom Among Socialists

The gloom is thickest on the left. Before Feb. 23, the Socialist Party, the second largest in parliament, was brimming with optimism, convinced by opinion polls that its attractive 39-year-old secretary-general, Felipe Gonzalez, would lead it to victory in elections that seemed to be nearing. But the frustrated coup has weakened the left -Spaniards will think twice about voting Socialist for fear of arousing the military again

With an implicit wink from the Socialists, the premier has begun putting the brakes on granting autonomy to Spain's restive regions, particularly Catalonia and the Basque provinces. The military had watched this creeping federalism with alarm, feeling it endangered the "unity of the fatherland." But stronger central power also pleases the government party and the Socialists, whose electoral clienteles were being eroded by small regional groupings. Soon a new electoral law may enshrine this newborn centralism, making it hard for regional parties to get into the Cortes.

Mr. Calvo Sorelo has also exploited the shock of the putsch and the temporary domestication of the left to quicken Spain's entry in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Socialists bave faintly muted their traditional opposition to Spanish membership, an idea unpopular with the party's sometimes radical bases. Last week, a gathering of NATO foreign ministers in Rome gave a green light to Spain's plans to be-

The Soviet leader did oot specify how, in the Kremlin's view, the Soviet Union was being slandered and threatened. However, his speech came against a background of acrimonious comments by Tass on the communique issued by the ministerial council of the Atlantic military alliance at a meeting in Rome last Monday.

Thus, in a statement citing the views of the "leading circles of the U.S.S.R." that was published Saturday in Pravda and other major Soviet newspapers, Tass con-demned the Western allies for recommitting themselves to the deployment of a new generation of U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

As to Washington's stated readiness to begin talks by the end of the year on placing limits on the medium-range missile systems of both sides, Tass said the offer was tied in with "all sorts of reservations" aimed at delaying the talks.

Moreover, the agency said, it was accompanied by another rejection of the Soviet proposal for a moratorium oo the deployment of new medium-range missiles in Eu-

By Michael Goldsmith

The Associated Press RABAT, Morocco - King Hassan II has sent some of his closest aides to 90 non-Communist capitals to express concern over what he sees as an intensified campaign by Lihya's leader, Col. Moamer Qadhafi, to undermine moderate regimes and promote Soviet expansionism in Africa.

The emissaries, according to high-level Moroccan sources, are carrying recent intelligence reports that purport to show the construction of secret air bases in Chad, Mali and Mauritania, and the establishment of a pan-Islamic legion of mercenaries intended to counter the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force. The force is intended to protect U.S. interests in the Gulf and the Iodian Ocean area.

Although there was no independent confirmation of the inteligence reports, Morocco's intelligence sources in Tripoli, Libya, have often proved accurate. The sources said that the oew reports are based on information from Moroccan sources and from the CIA and agents for Italy.

Iran Terms Peace Proposals Encouraging

TEHRAN — A peace mission from the nonaligned states suggested Sunday ways to end the seven-month-old Gulf war, and an Iranian Foreign Ministry spokesman described the suggestions as "encouraging and worth considering." It was the most positive Iranian assessment of peace efforts in almost a month.

Meanwhile, however, Iranian state radio said Iran should not negotiate with Iraq, and government spokesman Behzad Nabavi said the missioo was in Tchran "to study the aggression" of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein. The radio reported that Iraqi artillery pounded Ahwaz, in the oil-producing province of Khuzistan, killing an unspecified oumber of civilians Sunday.

The foreign ministers of Cuba, India and Zambia and the chief foreign affairs expert of the Palestine Liberatioo Organization met for 90 minutes with Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr. The Pars news agency said Mr. Bani-Sadr would take up their proposals at the next meeting of the Supreme Defense Council, whose reply was expected to be announced within two days.

Weinberger to Seek Allies' Aid in Gulf Defense

LONDON - U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger will ask the West European allies this week for more belp in defending the Gulf, possibly including an international strike force, a senior Pentagon official said Sunday.

The official, who asked out to be identified, said the Reagan administration's plans for the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force would be a major topic at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting that begins on Tuesday in Brussels.

Mr. Weinberger stopped in London overnight on his way to the talks. The offical said Mr. Weinberger would tell the allies the oew plan to set up an independent command for the force would oot in any way dilute the U.S. commitment to Western Europe or its ability to defend NATO in case of Soviet attack.

The paper said the directive called on local governments to support the army in its policy of growing its own agricultural produce. But it added that the army should occupy as little land as possible and respect the interests of local farming communities.

Financier Taken To Hong Kong

HONG KONG — Fogitive Asian financier Amos W. Dawe has been returned to Hong Kong under armed guard to face charges of defraoding a Soviet bank of $18 million

Mr. Dawe arrived Saturday from San Francisco and was immediately taken by police to the custodial ward of Queen Mary Hospital. There had been concern earlier that Mr. Dawe, 46, who suffers from high blood pressure, might be unable to make the trip.

The return of the international financier capped almost three years of efforts by the Hong Kong government to have him extradited from the United States. After a vigorous legal battle, the United States Friday deported Mr. Dawe, who left the country under protest.

During the legal struggle, Mr. Dawe consistently maintained he was being framed by Soviet agents and officials of the Hong Kong government. This theory does not take into account Mr. Begin's oft-declared moral commitment to the Lebanese Christians, or their strategie value to Israel's security. If the Syrians defeat the Christians and take over Lebanon, Mr. Begin argues, they could attack Israel from the north and the east.

BELFAST — The Irish Republican Army's political wing, Sinn Fein, condemned Sunday the "uncontrolled rioting" since Bobby Sands' death, and supporters of four IRA prigners on hunger four IRA prisoners on hunger strike met in emergency session to plan their next moves.

There was intense but scattered street fighting in Northern Ireland overnight, including the second mortar attack in two days on a po-lice station. Two soldiers were slightly injured.

Northern Ireland Secretary Humphrey Atkins repeated that Britain would oot meet the hunger strikers' demands for political-prisoner status. His office meanwhile, said the condition of Francis Hughes, 25, who is serving a life term for the slaying of a British soldier, continued to deteriorate Sunday on the 57th day of his bun-

The National H-Block Committee, which is waging a campaign for political-prisoner status for 1RA convicts in the H-shaped prison cell blocks, met Sunday in a elosed emergency session. Gerry Adams, vice president of Sinn Fein, issued a statement at the beginning of the meeting saying that it was time "to examine the campaign and the forces ranged against it."

Mr. Adams called for peaceful demonstrations and rallies, "Spo-radic uncootrolled rioting on a small scale forms no part of this strategy," he said,

They refused to speculate whether it was a hoax linked to an IRA threat to hlow up Shetland's Sullom Voe oil terminal during a dedication ceremony and visit by Queen Elizabeth II on Saturday. Police said army experts boarded the Ross Kipling and found only a bandful of wires wedged between two drums. The IRA said Saturday that it had "breached the English queen's security" and issued a warning to "clear the Shetland rig of all civilians." A Buckingham Palace spokesman said the queen's visit passed without incident.

Heavy Turnout Is Reported in Nepalese Vote

The Associated Press
KATMANDU, Nepai — Several million Nepalese have voted for a compartisan National Assembly to share power with the government of King Birendra for the next five years. Leaders of many traditional political groups boycotted the elec-tion, the kingdom's first general election in 22 years.

Early reports pointed to a sub-stantial turnout Saturday in remote areas but, because of resistance in Katmandu, a smaller vote than the 67 percent at the May, 1980, plebiscite. In that referendum, voters chose to retain the panchayat system under which the king controls the executive and is entitled to name 28 members of the 140-seat National Assembly. ## Pope Reiterates Anti-Abortion Stand

VATICAN CITY - Pope John Paul II made one of his strongest coodemnations of abortion Sunday, just a week before Italians are to vote in a national referendum on the issue. "It is the task and doty of the church to reaffirm that procured abortioo is death, it is the killing of an innocent creature," the pope said during his Sunday ad-

A strong lay movement backed by the Communist Party has criticized the pope for publicly campaigning in support of a church-backed motion in a May 17 referendum that calls for the repeal of Italy's 1978 abortion dress from the balcony of St. Pe- scope of the law, which now allows abortion on demand in state hospitals within the first three months of pregnancy.

In an address to 70,000 people

Mitterrand Beats Giscard for Presidency

rand's assumption of power. In banking circles, it is taken for granted that the Mitterrand victory will translate into a run out of the franc. It is widely assumed that one of the first acts of the new government will be to impose foreign exchange controls — a move it can make by executive order as soon as it takes over in two weeks. The only question bankers have what, if anything, the Giscard d'Estaing government will do to repel the expected attack on the franc during its final days as care-

French and foreign bankers suggest that the Giscard d'Estaing government would have an incentive to do nothing, allowing the at-tack on the franc to have the widest possible amplification in the hope that this would help arrest popular support for the left in the legislative elections next

To do nothing would mean that the government would have to withdraw temporarily from the Eumost European currencies in a band of fixed exchange rates to each other. These currencies float as a bloc against the dollar.

As long as France stays in the EMS, the government is obliged to keep the franc within a fixed band against the other member curren-cies. Thus, if all other elements that move exchange rates stay equal and only the franc weakens because of a Socialist victory, the government would have to spend its foreign currency reserves keep-ing the value of the franc within this band

At latest count, the Bank of France had ample reserves about 143 billion francs in assets other than gold and 226 billion francs worth of gold. But to spend these just waiting until the new Mitterrand government imposed exchange controls could be an expensive exercise. On Friday, the franc closed at 5.3593 to the dollar and at 2.3716 to the Deutsche mark. Uoder the EMS rules, the franc is allowed to move between a low of 2.3033 and a high of 2.4093 to the mark.

Nationalization Program

The expected rum oot of the franc is linked to deep suspicion in the business community over Mr. Mitterrand's economic program. The president-elect has promised to increase the minimum wage and Urges Abolition family benefits, reduce the working week from 40 or more hours to 35, raise tax rates on higher incomes, and to nationalize the remaining private banks, insurance companies and a number of large private industrial groups. But some Socialist party officials, such as Michel Rocard, have suggested that the platform was drawn up only to sat-isfy left-wing Socialists and to counter criticism from the Com-

One of the early indications of how Mr. Mitterrand aims to pro-ceed will be the interim government he appoints before the legislative elections take place. ### Pacifist Current Almost certainly, Mr. Mitter-rand will be less likely to intervene militarily abroad, such as in Africa, where his predecessor sent-troops to Zaire and Chad in an attempt to defend Western and French interests. Although the military budget was hardly an issue during the campaign, the Socialist Party in France still has a strong pacifist current, and Mr. Mitterrand may eventually conclude that military spending is less important than Mr. Giscard d'Estaing felt. Mr. Mitterrand made a point during the campaign to emphasize that he wanted close warm rela-tions with the United States. But he has also been outspoken against U.S. policies in the Third World. particularly in Central America, where he has backed the Sandinis-tas in Nicaragua and the Salvadoran leftist guerrilla movement. Within Western Europe, the Mitterrand victory is expected to have an impact ou French-West German affairs. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany enjoyed unusually close relations going back to the days when they were both young finance ministers. Their ties lent credence to the so-called French-German condominium that has dominated West European economic and foreign policies. Mr. Mitterrand has always been cool toward Mr. Schmidt and has much closer ties to the former chancellor, Willy Brandt, and other Social Democrats in West Germany who are critical of Mr. Schmidt's leadership of their party and their country.

Although Mr. Mitterrand has been a strong supporter of the European Economic Community and an advocate of enlarging its membership to include Spain and Portugal—he has also said that he would not feel beholden to the European Monetary System if it limited the freedom of his government to impose economic reforms.

Confidence Vote Won by Gandhi

The iss NEW DELHI - Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government has won a major victory in its first con-fidence test before the Parliament that was swept to power in the 1980 general election.

The government won the vote, 275-to-90, at the end of the stormy, 10-hour session Saturday that was marked by shouting and frequent interruptions as ruling party and opposition legislators traded angry words.

Mrs. Gandhi was not present in the ruling lower house during the debute because she is on an official tour of Switzerland. George Fer-nandes of the opposition Lok Dal (Peoples' Party), who moved the motion, had declared that the government had "failed on all fronts." It was apparently the first time that a confidence motion was put to a test for Parliament during the absence of a prime minister.

All the increases follow an FCC decision April 6 allowing AT&T to raise its earnings ceiling to 12.75 percent from what the commission called a "seriously inadequate" 10.5 percent. Water Supply Levels In U.S. High Plains 'Worst in 45 Years'

By Seth S. King

DENVER — Along the front range of the Colorado Rockies the highest peaks were still draped with snow. But below the 10,000-foot level the recentains need here. foot level the mountains were bare, and so was the cupboard of melted-snow water on which vast sections of the High Plains east of the Rockies depend for irrigation and municipal water supplies.

Snow-measuring teams found last week that the snow pack was only 28 percent of what is normal for this time of years and that most

"It's about the worst we've seen in 45 years of record keeping," said Bernard A. Shafer, supervisor of the surveys. He said the rate at which streams flow in the Platte River and Arkansas River drainage basins was barely a third of "This means that many of the springs and small streams that cat-tle ranchers use to water their stock will be dry by midsummer," Mr. Shafer said. "It also means that the cities and towns along the eastern side of the mountains, where 80 percent of Colorado lives, will be facing municipal water shortages this summer."

Denver and many of its suburbs have begun, a month earlier than usual, to limit lawn watering to every third day.

Too Late

A few late spring rains at the right time could help the High Plains' winter wheat, which re-quires relatively little rainfall and is nearing maturity in fair to good condition. But such rains would be too late to improve surface and underground water levels, Mr. Shafer

Most storage reservoirs on both sides of the Continental Divide were filled by late fall rains, so inpators east of the Rockies who draw water from storage systems will probably have enough to get by, he added,

Even so, we had the highest April temperatures in the last 108 years," he said, "and subsurface moisture was sucked out of many areas -- which means that more irrigation water will be needed to produce normal crops, and these will cost farmers a lot more money

this year."
Soil conservation officials are advising even farmers with priority rights to reservoir water to plant only their best land this year. "Bot those farmers and ranchers who take their irrigation and stock water straight out of the Arkansas and South Platte rivers will get ht-tle or no water at all," Mr. Shafer

This would sharply reduce yields of sugar beets, alfalfa, hay, garden vegetables and melons, which in turn would increase retail prices for those commodities. And empty ponds would force ranchers to sell cattle much sooner than planned.

This is the second year that these areas have had below-normal moisture. The reasons depend on which climatologist one listens to. Some believe it is proof that the Earth is entering a dry cycle simi-

Throughout the United States, stream flows are abnormally low. In the Northeast, recent rains have relieved planting conditions but have not replenished the reservoirs on which many cities depend for their water supplies. Another ex-tended dry season this summer would threaten crops and water supplies in areas dependent oo current rainfall

Through the old Dust Bowl areas of southeastern Colorado, southwestern Kansas and the Panhandle of Oklahoma, winter wheat got a good enough start last fall to provide cover for the sandy soils As a result, wind erosion and dust storms were no worse than usual

But to the north, into Nebraska and the Dakotas, sparse winter snow left wide areas dangerously short of moisture. In the rich cornproducing areas of central Nebraska, farmers pump essential irriga-tion water from wells in the Ogallala sands, the vast aquifer that lies beneath the High Plains. In recent years, heavy drawing from this irreplaceable underground supply has lowered the water table more than 30 feet in many areas. Farmers are expected to require much larger amounts from their wells this summer, and they they will have to draw it up from deeper levels at much greater cost.

An unusually dry fall and winter in Minnesota and Iowa has left some corn and soybean areas very short of subsoil moisture.

Io eight drought-stricken counties of southern Florida, a mandatory 10-percent cutback in all water use went into effect last week and was to be increased to 25 percent by Monday if there was no rain. Alvin Samet, a spokesman for the National Weather Service in Miami, said no rain was forecast for the next few days.

South Florida had its driest April on record this year, with 0.05 inches of rainfall recorded at Miami International Airport. The water level in Lake Okeechobee has fallen to 11.2 fcet, the lowest since 1971. In the last two weeks, about 70,000 acres of sawgrass have burned in Dade, Broward and Palm Beach counties, and about 2,000 acres were still on fire late

The region's rainy season is due by about Friday, however, and Mr. Samet said: "We can make up 3 inches of rain in one day with a

Japan Survivors In Ship Disaster Ask $1.7 Million

TOKYO — The surviving crewmen and families of the Nissho Maru, the Japanese freighter that sank after a collision with a U.S. nuclear submarine, have demanded that the U.S. Navy pay them $1.78 million in compense The damage claim was sent Saturday by certified mail to the U.S. Navy base in Yokosuka, near Tokyo, the victims' attorney said. The U.S. government has said that it will bear full responsibility for the accident and that a "fair amount" of compensation will be paid as soon as possible.

The claim asked the Navy to pay $400,000 to the family of Capt. Taizo Noguchi and $380,000 to the family of First Mate Sumio Matsunoge. Both officers were killed in the April 9 accident.

The surviving crewmen asked to be paid sums ranging from $55,800 to $62,800. In addition, Kobe Navigation Service Co., the firm that bired the 15-member crew, do-manded $232,560.

Attorney Tatsuo Soma said ne-gotiations with Navy officials will Tuesday. The owner of Nissho Maru and the owners of its cargo asked the Navy for $2.6 milbon in compensation on May 1.

CIA Seeks Law Allowing Searches of Newsrooms

By Charles Mohr New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - William J. Casey, the director of central intelligence, has asked Congress to pass legislation that would permit the FBI to conduct surprise searches of newspaper and broadcast news-rooms in cases involving the publication of the names of covert CIA

The measure would amend legislation enacted into law last year that requires law enforcement agencies to obtain subpoenas for notes, film, tapes or other documentary materials used by persons engaged in publishing or broad-

Leadership Is a Good Horse

The news of the week was The Reagan Victory. At least it was part of the news. When the Democratic House voted for the president's stringent budget by a 77-vote margin, even Democrats were impressed. "He's a winner and he's a hero," said Thomas Foley, the Democratic whip.

Still, all the news was not triumph. On the very same day, there was another headline: Record Rate on 30-Year U.S. Bonds. That was not just short-term wobbling by traders. When big long-term investors insist on getting 13.99 percent interest, it is a flaming signal that they do not believe inflation will be conquered. How able a leader President Reagan is will now turn not on bow much capital be has won in the political arena but on what be can buy with it in the economic.

There is no minimizing the president's political accomplishment. It was a lesson for the rest of us in leadership — and how not to generalize too quickly about the weakness of the modern presidency. Consider the wild gyrations of opinion in one generation.

The presidency is weak, said James MacGregor Burns in his 1963 book "The Deadlock of Democracy." Congress blocks or kills most bold presidential proposals. Yet within a few tragic weeks. Congress was falling all over itself to support a new president. Before long, many thought the presidency not only strong, but too strong. By 1974, Arthur Schlesinger was writing of an imperial presidency. By May of Jimmy Carter's first year, once again, people were saying, too

Mr. Reagan has shown he is a leader. He has wisely concentrated his administration's energies on the economy. And his lieutenants have been tactically adept; they are said to know the Hill so well they even know what brand of cigars House speaker Thomas (Tip) O'Neill smokes (Don Diego). Small wonder that they defeated the Democrats' budget plan. That plan was not really hostile to, or very different from, the Reagan approach. It was skillfully designed, reasonable — preferable. Yet it was mashed flat.

Victory notwithstanding, there is little cheer in the news from the markets. Any economic program must try to do two things: retard inflation and stimulate growth. But when long-term interest rates hit 14 percent, it means people don't believe inflation is coming down. The skidding stock market, meanwhile, suggests vast skepticism about growth. Having won a political license for holding back federal spending, will the president now use it?

Will be chop spending for the truly not needy, with respect to Social Security? Will be be bold enough also to curtail the invisible kind of spending, through tax breaks? Will he now sbarpen his proposals for tax cuts and investment incentives, to make them efficient stimulators of growth?

Unless he does, The Reagan victory last week may end up as the high point of the administration. To paraphrase Matthew Arnold, leadership is a good borse, but a borse to ride somewhere.

Japan and Defense

In the course of explaining to Congress the small size and discreet shape of his country's defense posture, Japan's Premier Zenko Suzuki spoke a line that came out this way: "We would prefer to be a wise mouse rather than a roaring lion." But is that the only

The U.S. argument with Japan over its defense role has been going on, politely, for a long time. In the main, Americans have been extraordinarily respectful of the special cir-cumstances — defeat in World War II and being the target of the only nuclear weapons ever dropped in anger - that produced Japan's constitutional ban on war, its low rate of defense spending and its nuclear allergy. That these limitations are imbedded in Japanese politics is well known. The United States has been more than willing to provide an essential great-power umbrella.

The Japanese seem slow to recognize, however, that times have changed. They acknowledge freely, for instance, that they are still working on the basis of a defense plan drawn up in 1976, as though it were something sacrosanct. But one does not have to subscribe uncritically to the Reagan defense projections, which amount to a complete tearing up of the U.S. "defense plan" of 1976, to grant that the look of things is very different in 1981. Mr. Suzuki's predecessor told Americans last year that Japan would increase defense spending by 9.7 percent (to 1 percent of GNP). The actual figure was 7.6 percent. One does not want to get hung up on numbers, but as indices they have their value.

In the Japanese view, their most valuable security contribution lies less in the military area than in fostering stability by belping out in Third World development. They are right to underline the link between development and security. But it is necessarily a complement to, not a substitute for, the link of security. The strain on this issue is not something new with the Reagan administration, and it is, we suspect, bound to grow.

Most of the diplomacy the two nations conduct with each other entails regulating their immense and delicate economic exchanges. These are not likely to get easier. Until now, they have been conducted in an atmosphere relatively free of differences on other issues, such as security, it is in both countries' interests that this continue. Just as there had to be earnest negotiation and compromise on the auto exports issue, however, so must there be a continuing engagement on the security issue. The Americans must listen hard, but the Japanese cannot simply explain their special conditions and sit back with folded arms. Americans do not expect Japan to become a lion that roars. But a lion that

Influencing Guatemala

Frankly, when we suggested the other day that the United States consider resuming military aid to Guatemala in order to acquire influence with which to tame the government's repressions, we were quite aware that the idea is subject to abuse, but we did not know the administration was beading so fast toward potential abuse of it. A plan has since emerged. The United States evidently is to resume military aid to the Lucas Garcia dictatorship, but to do so on grounds that there are some 2,000 "Cuban-supported Marxist guerrillas" in Guatemala. The notion of using aid for leverage seems to bave faded into the middle distance, where it can be beld np as evidence of good intentions but not allowed to get in the way.

There are guerrillas in Guatemala. But though they are certainly in some sense Cuban-encouraged, they bave been around for years and are pretty much sustained on their own. Some foreign observers have detected a guerrilla buildup in the last year or so, but this is attributed to a very specific factor. It is a reaction to the almost unbelievable scale of violence conducted, not against guerrillas, but against civilians by the government's security forces and by death squads with official ties. Amnesty International suggests that perhaps 3,600 citizens have been killed or bave "disappeared" in the last two years. The army claims to have lost only 62 men in

What these figures suggest to us is that any program of U.S. military aid not tied tightly to specific measures on limiting official violence is unthinkable. The evidence is that the Lucas Garcia government, which is outside the pale even for some of Washington's most reflexive anti-Communist combatants, is the chief source of the guerrilla movement.

If the administration's aim is simply to fight the guerrillas, then no aid should be given. If its aim is to stop the killings in order to try to belp make Guatemala a healthy society and an effective anti-Communist bulwark, then it must tie aid to government performance. Whether the Reagan administration has the self-discipline to make that connection remains the relevant question.

Actually, administration self-discipline is already being tested in El Salvador. The situation is different there: Mr. Reagan inherited a U.S. commitment, while in Guatemala be inherited a vacuum as far as current official U.S. ties are concerned.

Before trying his hand in Guatemala, it might be useful for Mr. Reagan to show whether be can push the genie of official repression back into the bottle in El Salvador, even while aiding the local junta in a battle against guerrillas. His administration is trying, perhaps harder than some critics grant, but it has not yet met with success.

Trade-Offs: There Is No Free Lunch

By Stephen Klaidman

WASHINGTON — Arthur Okun, the U.S. economist and adviser to Democratic presidents, talked and wrote about what be called "trade-offs." He argued that in the so-cioeconomic equation, there is a trade-off between equality and efficiency. In other words, you don't get something for nothing.

Soren Kierkegaard, the Danish philosopher (this reference helps rid me of my remorse for once having called him a Swede), wrote of the sacrifice implicit in every choice. The point was the same. There is no free lunch.

There can be little argument with that from anyone experienced in the real world. And there are many of ways of expressing it. "You can't have it both ways," for example. Or, "If you want something, you have to pay the

Sacrifice

In politics, though, there is, generally speak-ing, one unacceptable sacrifice, or, if you pre-fer, trade-off. Elected officials will rarely exchange office for anything. And one of the sur-est ways to lose office these days is to try to persuade a public that has grown soft that sac-rifices are necessary.

President Reagan understands that It helped him to get elected and to retain the support of Congress and the American people for his economic program, which promises a better life for everyone at no cost to anyone. Never mind that history and economics contradict the president's assertions, the public is ready to believe what it wants to believe.

Jimmy Carter either failed to understand that, or if he did understand it, could not quite muster the mystical faith that it takes to draft and sell such a program as his. That's not the only reason he lost to Mr. Reagan, but it is one of the reasons.

There are a number of issues at the moment. most of them defense and foreign policy related, that help illustrate the basic point that politicians will pander to the public rather than try to persuade the people of the need for sacrifice at the possible price of votes.

Lifting the grain embargo is an obvious example. The Reagan administration argument against it was twofold: that it was ineffective and that it imposed an unfair hurden on farmers alone. The argument was wrong on the first count, but the second count has undergone less scrutiny.

So what if, in this instance, the burden fell on farmers? Perhaps the next time it will be felt in Silicon Valley, or at the Ford Motor Co. The purpose of the embargo was to impose a penalty on the Soviet Union. It was doing that. Over time all Americans will share the burden, but it is unlikely if not impossible that every-one share it equally at all times.

CROSSCURRENTS

What about deployment of the MX missile? Setting aside the question of whether the country needs the MX, which I believe it does, the question is how to base it and where.

Mormon Protest

Last week, the Mormon Church spoke out against basing the MX in Utah and Nevada, where most Mormons live. The implicit argument is that putting it in those two states would put an unfair burden on Mormons. But if that's the best hasing mode for the missile and the security of the United States depends on it, what choice is there?

The problem is, it's not the best basing mode. Without SALT-2, the Soviet Union is allowed to huild enough warheads to wipe out all 4,600 silos planned to conceal the 200 MXs. The best system is one that is fully mobile, moving the missiles by highway through many states. But so many voters dislike that proposal that it has virtually no chance of even being

Then, there's the military draft. There are few members of Congress who are knowledgeable about defense issues who do not believe that a draft is necessary to improve the U.S. defense posture. And many liberals and conservatives believe that there are numerous social virtues to conscription.

Yet Mr. Reagan, the apostle of a strong United States with the best possible defense establishment, opposed the draft during his campaign and still opposes it. The reason is simple: The draft is death on votes. The American people are unwilling to sacrifice their service and their sons. The president and the members of Congress are unwilling to sacrifice

The president is praised for his ability to make Americans feel good about themselves and about their country. The praise is de-served. That is part of the role of leadership. But it is not everything. And it is a talent that can be abused.

Costing Votes?

It is more difficult, and often more important, to teach the hard lessons — the ones peo-ple don't want to learn because they involve trade-offs, or in Kierkegaard's blunter term,

The right decision on the grain embargo would have involved teaching that kind of lesson. The president shied away from it. The MX and draft decisions involve the same choice. All the signs indicate that Mr. Reagan will make political decisions in those cases,

If he does, he will be sacrificing national security on the altar of politics. That is not a happy trade-off. And in the long run, it will even cost votes. There will be a similar day of reckoning on the economy. Empty promises can take a president just so far. In the cu there is always a price to pay, for the public and the president.

On NATO: Read the Fine Print

By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — President Reagan put a high gloss — "He comes home in triumph" on Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s work at the NATO meeting. No doubt Mr. Haig de-served it. Working under pressure, he gave the allies the assurances they demanded of U.S. readiness to negotiate with Moscow on limiting nuclear weapons in Europe, and he got the allies to go along with some tough Reagan-style talk about Soviet global conduct. I fear, however, that the Haig performance, though a "triumph" of sorts, was ephemeral and perhaps even deceptive. It came about against the better judgment of the administration's dominant national-security figures, headed by Mr. Reagan, and will not be easily sus-

The Rub

Check the fine print of the NATO communique: "The allies welcomed the intention of the U.S. to begin negotiations with the So-viet Union on Theater Nuclear Forces arms control" - except the sentence didn't end there. It ended this way: "on Theater Nuclear Forces arms control within the There's the ruh. There is no SALT framework - no framework within which to negotiate with Moscow, not just on European "theater," weapons but also on the weapons in the two great powers' central systems. Mr. Reagan has set aside the old framework hut has not approached Moscow to construct a new one.

To promise to negotiate on European nuclear arms "within the SALT framework" is to throw a curve. It puts the United States in n posture of curnestness and permits the European allies to tell their anxious publics that, since the new administration is ready to move on the first track of a 1979 NATO decision to negotiate on limiting nukes in Europe, the Europeans should go ahead on the second track of preparing to deploy those makes, starting two years hence. But if there is no SALT framework, there can be no real negotiations over nukes based in Europe. The Europeans are bound to catch on.

Turn Away

Why is there no SALT framework? For that, one must turn away from Mr. Haig, who is manfully struggling to make do, and inspect the latest presentation by the president's chief foreign-policy selor Edwin Meese 3d. On TV last week, he was typically airy, open-ended and hard-to-get, suggesting that SALT talks depend on unspecified Soviet good conduct, on the "total context of world relations," on "the whole sense of timing and the sense of other matters," on "our own defense capabilities and what we're doing in this country." and so on.

Mr. Messe recalled that the president "has said he is not going to negotiate from a position of weakness, that he's not going to talk — consider any kind of talks opposition to the invasion of Alghanistan, then what possible purpose, other than a misguided campaign pledge, is served by President Reagan lifting the wheat embargo? In the stories announcing the embargo's end, there is a strident statement from Lord Carrington calling for a unified NATO policy in dealing with the Russians. Before contributing to that laudable objective, the United States should first unify its own policy. Is the Reagan administration still opposed to the Afghanistan takeover or just to Mr. Haig?

There is ample evidence that the Russians have been getting quanti-ties of U.S. wheat right along via transhipments in Greek ships at Antwerp. Wasn't it Lenin who said the democracies will sell you the rope to hang themselves with?

There is an alarming childlike simplicity in the White House announcement lifting the embargo. The hope is expressed that the Russians won't take this as a sign of weakness! What else? Cupidity?

Some would call this toughness. I would call it a point of view fundamentally inconsistent with nego-tiation and with the proper goal of negotiation, which is not victory or superiority but compromise or accommodation --- what Elliot Richardson calls, honestly, a striving for "firmer and cheaper dead-locks." Mr. Reagan, by contrast, is a true radical, a Utopian, who would not merely adjust the bal-ance but rewrite the whole equa-tion in a way intended to tion in a way intended to restore the myth of U.S. invincibility.

I happen to believe Mr. Reagan is profoundly mistaken. To me, SALT is a process that, wisely applied, can help to reduce the unavoidable costs and risks of the unavoidable costs. clear age, and to maintain the civil dialogue that is the essential offset to the ongoing political competi-tion between the great powers. The notion that either of them would accept permanent strategic inferiority, or would pay the political costs arising from it, contradicts everything I understand about

The Europeans are bound to catch on to this, too, and then the alliance will be in real trouble. Perhaps this is what it will take to sound an alert. The first phase of the crisis will break when the allies find out that theater nuclear talks have no prospects, and the second when they realize that central-systems talks are being projected into the dim mists of a second Reagan term, and that they have as their purpose the imposi-

Maura Clarke, Ita Ford and Dorothy Kazel and lay worker Jean Donovan. The four women were last seen alive at San Salvador's airport shortly before nightfall.

Van Burned

The following day their van was found burned on a road northwest of the airport. A day later the four churchwomen's bodies were found in an unmarked grave near the village of Santiago Nonualco, 20 miles from where their van had been destroyed.

From the beginning it had been suspected that six National Guardamen, among El Salvador's most feared soldiers, had been responsible since they were known to be manning a roadblock just beyoud the airport from which the night.

Col. Garcia insisted Saturday that the six men were only being held on suspicion, based mostly on the circumstantial evidence of their having been at the roadblock, pending more detailed incriminaling evidence that he insisted the government was still awaiting from the FBt. The U.S. agency was brought into the case at the specific request of the civilian-military junta that rules El Salvador.

Two weeks ago, when the first reports of the six suspects were leaked, the FBI stated that its evaluation report of its investigation into the case did not "refer to suspects, does not point a finger or name those responsible."

That evidence was believed to have hinged on the matching of fingerprints of the suspects with those taken from the burned van. Indicial officials here have indicated that the first five sets of fingerprints submitted to the FBI did not match up with those found on the van. A second batch of fingerprints are alleged by Salvadoran officials to have been sent to Washington, but U.S. officials have not confirmed it. .Col. Garcia said that not only had fingerprints been sent to the .FBI for checking but that the suspects' weapons had also been nen were being held in turned over 10 the U.S. Embassy, with the Dec. 2 killing so that the FBI could conduct ballistic tests.

Bank Corporation deliberately placed somewhat less emphasis on inter-bank operations (which were scaled down slightly) to focus more on loans to private and commercial customers and public corporations (loans to customers increased 13% overall). The year also saw an increase of Sfr. 570 million in the issue of long dated bond capital (including subordinated capital notes) to generate additional

The accent in general was on controlled growth in the balance sheet, upgrading the loan portfolio and improving its maturity structure, and raising profitability.

Meeting clients' needs

Swiss Bank Corporation takes the resourcefulness and reliability associated with the best of Swiss banking and matches them to today's market needs. Our scope, experience and sophistication have helped us expand and refine our services to customers in the face of an uncertain global economy. And this at every level of finance-from corporate finance to the more traditional banking facilities. With our wide range of branches and representatives in six continents, Swiss Bank Corporation quickly mobilizes resources to help you capitalize on your opportunities when and where they

An international presence One reason we can do all this is that we've built up a large international network with particular strength in major markets and financial centres-exactly where you're likely to want help with faraway investments, foreign banking services and overseas trade transactions. This doesn't mean we take a distant approach to our customers' problems... On the contrary. our close involvement has led us into various nonbanking areas that don't make a great impression on our own balance sheet but do have a considerable impact on our customers' projects and performance: special financing, management consulting, economic research, engineering services, etc. If you'd like to learn more about our own performance in 1980, just use the coupon below to request a copy of "Profile"-a booklet that also tells you where you can find our branches in Switzerland and abroad, as well as our representative offices, subsidiaries, affiliated companies and members of the Swiss Bank Corporation Consultants Group. In short, the key to quality banking, worldwide.

The Associated Press LONDON — Counterfeit £5 notes with a total face value of £2 million (about $4.2 million), packed for distribution on the Continent, were seized in London late last week and seven men were Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, Democrat of South Carolina, said Friday

Sen. Hollings said, predicting that Mr. Reagan would probably make changes in the cost-of-living formula for pensions by administrative action if Congress does not do it for him.

The Budget Committee's pro posal, drafted by Sen. Hollings would make two basic changes. Starting July 1, cost-of-living increases, currently pegged to the consumer price index, would be based on average wage increases for the previous year if wages increased less than prices. Starting in 1982, payment of increases would be delayed from July 1 to Oct. 1.

At the end of January 1981, the Canadian national oil company, Petro-Canada, made en offer to buy the shares of Petrofina Canada Inc. of which we owe about 70%, over a

This offer was made by Petro-Canada in accordance

This offer was made by Petro-Canada in accordance with the Canadian government's policy as announced in its national energy programme. Bearing in mind the penalising measures taken in Canada against companies in which the majority holding is foreign owned, we decided to make a favourable response to Petro-Canada's bid for an initial block of shares, this will enable the Canadian national oil company to own 51% of the capital of Petrolina Canada Inc. in 1981.

The sale of Petrolina Canada Inc shares will provide us with increased financial resources which will be assigned to new developments. It should be looked at from the point of view of the Group's growth.

Germany is ready to give up on it,

The project is a victim not only of the Reagan administration's free-market philosophy and budget-cutting, but also of congressional charges of mismanagement, cost over-runs and delays as well as slackening of the energy crunch and questions about synfuels projects generally.

We're seeing the birthing pains of m industry, and it's a question of who will bear the costs," says a staff aide to the House energy and environment subcommittee, who asked not to be named. "It's a matter of how to allocate resources." But there's another problem with the SRC-II project, be contends: "It's an unmitigated disaster.

Long-Term Impact

The demise of SRC-II may have long-term implications for other synfucis projects, which were to be producing the equivalent of 500,000 barrels of oil a day by 1987 and 2 million barrels a day by 1992 under goals set out the act creating the synfuels corporation. The United States currently is importing about 6.4 million barrels of oil a day, down substantially from levels when Mr. Carter took office.

The SRC-II demonstration plant was designed to convert 6,000 tons a day of highsulfur coal into 20,000 barrels a day of synthetic oil. Eventually, it was hoped the plant would be expanded, n module at a time, until it could produce up to 100,000 barrels a day of the fuel. The project was pictured as a step toward energy independence.

But opponents of the project note that the fuel produced by SRC-II would be only an industrial and utility boiler fuel to replace beavy residual fuel and coal, neither of which are in short supply or affected by OPEC imports. Supporters of the plan counter that the ultimate goal is to refine the product further into high-quality gasoline and home heating oil, which would help reduce oil imports.

The White House wants to cut funding of SRC-II entirely in fiscal 1982 and has left just enough fuoding in its fiscal 1981 budget to keep up international appearances while it negotiates the termination of the project with Japan and West Germany.

The administration has suggested the principals -- West Germany, Japan and Gulf Oil could make a competitive proposal to the independent Synthetic Fuels Corp. for possible funding. But none of them is interested and, if they were, they would be at the bottom of the corporation's priority list.

The administration based its funding cuts on its view that the private sector should take a greater share of the risk and cootribute a higher share of the estimated $3.4 billion in total costs, rather than relying so heavily on federal

Gulf Oil is in for $100 million, including the costs of the site, credit for contractor fees and a credit for the estimated value of the techno-logical work Gulf did before the government got involved. Its cash contribution is $15 million. Through a subsidiary, Pittsburgh & Midway Coal Mining, Gulf is responsible for the design, management and operation of the nlanı.

Even before the Reagan budget cuts, the SRC-II plant was coming under harsh attack
— from the House energy and environment subcommittee, from the General Accounting Office and, in more muted tones, from the Energy Department.

Mismanagement Alleged

The subcommittee has concluded after an investigation that there had been unwarranted cost overruns, delays and mismanagement on the part of Gulf.

The original cost estimate of $700 million has jumped to $3.4 billion, and the project is 15 months behind schedule. About $90 million in government funds already has been spent. Ground was supposed to be broken in Morgantown this year, and construction was to be completed in September, 1984, but that date had slipped to December, 1985.

Rep. Toby Moffett, the Connecticut Democrat who is chairman of the subcommittee, also questions the relative value of synfuels projects in general, saying their high costs may not be warranted by what he feels may be their rather limited potential. Or as the subcommittee staffer said, "For $2 billion, you could weatherize all Of New England."

In 1979 an Energy Department evaluation of the proposed project concluded that the per-formance of Pittsburgh & Midway during the design phase "indicates a need for considerable improvement. Areas where improved performance is desired include internal management, design, cost estimating, scheduling, relationships with DOE [the Energy Department] and access for DOE to both P&M and thirdparty proprietary data.

"Unless all of these problems are satisfacto-rily resolved, the success of the SRC II project will be in jeopardy."

Mr. Blount has a heart-felt vision of a strong corporate Ameri-ca. Stephanie DeLambert, an analyst for Robinson-Humphrey in Atlanta, finds his confidence in corporate growth justified. The new Saudi venture is one reason. Some 45 percent of the revenues from the $1.7 billion contract will go to n company that pulled in more than half of its total $651 million revenues from construction in the year ended in February. The new contract will "propel Blount into an entirely new level of corpo-rate possibilities," she says.

Impulsive Purchase

Winton M. Blount was born into a prosperous family in rural Union Springs, Ala., in 1921, and reared, as he says, "in the en-trepreneurial tradition." His father's death during World War II left him and his brother Houston with deteriorated family interests.

One spring day in 1946 Mr. lount somewhat impulsively bought four new Army surplus D-7 Caterpillar tractors for $7,000 The projects on the contracting business apiece and announced to his search of a broad, brother Houston, "We're going into the contracting business."

Houston went on to pursue the less risky business of materials supply. and become chief executive of Vul-can Materials in Birmingham. In 1972 he took on incumbent Sen. John Sparkman in Alabama. But a resounding defeat at the polls sent him back to Blount Inc. — and

Mr. Blount moved. Unable to unload the mobile home manufacturing subsidiary, he took a $7.4 million pretax writeoff. He closed the two steel fabrication plants and sold the motel. He sold the grain elevators, quite profitable during the grain boom of the 1970s, to enable agribusiness managers to concentrate on more technologically oriented seed processing specialties. With federal contracts again possible, the company rebuilt the Apollo launch site to handle the space shuttle Columbia.

Mr. Blount has been particularly enamored of Middle East oil money since the 1973-74 embargo, and the company quickly opened offic-es in Jidda, Riyadh, Tehran and

Mr. Blount eyed the possibilities for a new University of Riyadh campus for six years. Originally proposed as a $3.4 billion project, it was scaled down to $1.7 billion after student upheavals in that part of the world. Mr. Blount took 45 percent of the reduced project, with the balance going to the French builder Bouygues.

Mr. Glynn, vice president and chief financial officer, represented the company through six months of what Mr. Blount termed "tortu-rous and exhausting negotiations" with a consortium of American and French banks for the $430 million bank guarantee the Saudis

Signs of Abating Inflation

Mr. Kaufman aside, most analysts were heartened late last week by the continued signs that infla-tion in the United States is abating — wholesale prices rose 0.8 per-cent in April compared with a 1.3percent increase the previous month — as well as by the large money supply, M-1B, fell $3.6 billion in the week ended April 29. But this is not expected to result in any sudden easing in money-market pressures as this measure averaged a 121/2 percent rate of increase in the latest four weeks, well over the Fed's 6-to-8½ percent growth

"It was an extraordinarily neurotic market, with dealers scrambling to go short Monday and Tuesday and scrambling equally hard to cover those shorts by week's end," a U.K. dealer remarked.

With the annual meeting of the Association of International Bond Dealers scheduled for Thursday and Friday in Hamburg, this week will be a short trading week with most dealers therefore unlikely to take much of a position.

Sweden having blazed the way, ultimately all prime-based loans will have some kind of braces and belts." There are three possible pricings under the Swedish formula. If all is normal, the margin is 15 basis points over the prime, rising to 25 points over the prime in the latter years. If the prime rate for two weeks exceeds by 110 basis points the adjusted CD rate, the interest falls to the adjusted CD rate plus 110 basis (1.f percentage) points.

And to protect the banks against a prime rate that for, say, political reasons fails to keep up with money-market rates, if the adjusted CD rate exceeds the prime rate, the lending cost is the CD rate plus the margin.

The Life of J. Pierpont Morgan

By Andrew Sinclair. Little, Brown. Illustrated. 269 pp. $1

Reviewed by John Leonard

OF J. Pierpont Morgan, James Bank once remarked: "But then you see, he is a poet: Morgan is a poet." One tends to doubt this. Poetry should not be held accountable for the vagrant romantic urges of pluto-crais, even if, like Cyrano, Morgan had a nose problem. That Morgan appreciated actresses and ancient Egypt is, perhaps, commendable. That he seems to have identified with the pirate Henry Morgan, and named three of his yachts Corsair, is somewhat winning. That he suffered variously from rheumatic fever, skin eruptions. headaches, stomach attacks, fainting fits, meiancholies and acne inspires sympathy; he sounds like Alice James. That he acquired art and women is understandable. That he managed to die in Rome, after an apparently suc-cessful seduction of a 50-year-old aristocratic Englishwoman, is at least risi-

But poets are made of sterner stuff. Morgan specialized in silence and Cuban cigars. He punished his son as se-verely as he had been punished by his father. His office was in the habit of investing, as a private bank, in proper-ties it happened to control as a holding company. These properties were not inconsiderable, including U.S. Steel, AT&T, International Harvester General Electric, many railroads and a number of shipping lines. He missed the point of motor cars (Ford) and plastics (Du Pont). He was, moreover, an Episcopalian. We do tend to dream about him Certainly John Dos Passos did so in "1919," and so did E.L. Doctorow in "Ragtime." A copy of the famous Steichen portrait, which is on the jack-et of this biography, used to hang in a place of honor in my bathroom; I am now informed that what looked like a knife in his left hand was actually the carved end of the arm of the chair in which he sat, with his intimidating bulk, for a five-minute snapshot session. His close-set eyes, anyway, were more compelling than what seemed a naked blade or what was obviously a regrettable nose. Dos Passos spoke of magpie eyes"; Andrew Sinclair calls them "laser beams."

Sinclair is an English novelist — "My Friend Judas" and "Gog" and "Magog" were stylish fictions - who has for obscure reasons regressed to. the writing of biographies of the likes of Warren G. Harding, Jack London, John Ford and now Morgan. The regression has not served the cause of prose with much distinction. "Corsair" is workmanlike, a box of facts dumped almost willy nilly on the head of the reader. When in doubt, he settles for a cliche: "Between the deviland the deep blue sea" is one of many

If we are to continue to dream about this quintessential merchant prince - who really wanted to be Edward VII or "to have ruled as a pope in Rome, a Burgundian dul. entine prince or a belted e. IF it were really better to be lucky than good, this sentiment would not be expressed just by bitter losers. But no one would deny that there are times when it is best to be both lucky and good.

The fascinating, though flawed, game between the American grand-masters Yasser Scirawan and Peter Biyiasas in the third round of the Louis Statham International Tournament in Lone Pine, Calif., showed both qualities in large measure.

Seirawan adopted 3 B-B4, bringing about a quiet, massuming London system with colors reversed, probably because he favors slow, maneuvering positional play, although this game was in for a drastic change later on. An important alternative to the formation Biyiasas used here would have been 6 ... N-B3; 7 QN-Q2, Q-K1; 8 B-R2, P-K4; 9 PxP, NxP; 10 NxN, PxN; 11 N-B4, N-Q2, as in the game between Vasily Smyslov and Svetozar Gligoric in Vienna, 1957.

The North Stars, who will be making their first appearance ever in the Stanley Cup finals, tonk n l-0 lead on Al MacAdam's power play goal at 13:52 of the first peri-od. After Calgary's Bob Gould was fouled for interference, Brad Max-well fired a shot from the Minnesota blue line and Payne deflected the puck to MacAdam, who tapped it past the sprawled Riggin. Calgary came back with a power-play goal early in the second period to tie the game as Willi Plett, camped in front of the net, tipped in a shot by Phil Russell at 2:57. Midway through the second period, Dino Ciccarelli finally beat

Riggin, his former junior hockey teammate who had frustrated him for most of the series. Defenseman Gordie Roberts took a shot from the point, which Neal Broten deflected into Riggin's chest. The puck popped back out and Cic-

Celtics, Rockets Tied, 2-All As Finals Return to Boston

HOUSTON - Mike Dunleavy and Moses Malone led a thirdquarter Houston charge that carried the Rockets to 91-86 triumph over the Boston Celtics Sunday, tving their National Basketball Association championship series at two victories apiece. The fifth game of the best-of-seven playoff finals will be played in Boston Tuesday night.

In Saturday's Game 3 here. Cedric Maxwell scored 19 points and grabbed 10 rebounds and Chris Ford keyed a tenacious Celtic defense that completely throt-iled the Rockets and helped Boston to a 94-71 triumph.

Malone, Houston's 6-foot-10 workhorse center, scored eight points from in close Sunday as the Rockets opened the second half with a 10-2 surge for a 60-52 lead with 7:56 left in the third quarter.

Then Dunleavy, a 6-3 guard, scored 11 points in the last 6:14 of the third period to help the Rockets take a 75-67 lead into the final quarter. Houston held an 88-76 advantage with 6:27 to play before Boston put on a closing surge.

The 6-foot-8 Maxwell, playing angrily and talking to Malone carly in Game 3, scored his points over the Houston center and led the Celtics to an early lead they never gave up.
Ford held the Rockets' sixth man, Calvin Murphy, to three field goals in Game 3 as he led the courtwide defensive effort. Houston's point intal tied the lowest in an NBA final series game since 1955, when the 24-second shot was first used. Boston dominated, as many observers felt they would throughout the series. Games 1 and 2, however, had been close defensive struggles settled in the final minutes. Malone scored 23 points under constant double- and triple-team pressure Saturday, but his only offensive help came from forward Bill Willoughby, who added 12

Boston forced Houston to shoot less than 30 percent from the field in the first three quarters Saturday. In the first half, the Rockets bad only 30 points, the lowest total of any team in the NBA playoffs this year. Parrish ignored having five fouls with 7:44 left in the third quarter and scored seven straight points in build a 52-36 lead. The Celtics led by as many as 17 points in the first half with Ford and Maxwell combining in score 23 points, more than they had scored in either of the first two

But in Game 4 Dunleavy, a little-used reserve on the 1977 Philadelphia team that lost in the title series to Portland, led all scorers with 28 points, his career playoff high. Malone added 24 - and 22 rebounds - and Robert Reid contributed 19 points. Maxwell scored 24 and Parish 18 for Boston; Bird was limited to 8 for the second straight game.

Tied 12 Times

The score was tied 12 times in the first quarter, during which the Celtics made eight of nine freethrow attempts, while the Rockets did not go to the line once. Dunleavy had 10 points in the quarter, including a short jumper with 25 seconds left that made it 26-26 at the end of the first period.

Houston outrebounded Boston 16-7 in the first quarter in make up for its 42 percent field-goal shooting and its lack of free throws.

The Rockets finally attempted their first free throw with 5:37 left in the second quarter — Willough-by making it for a 37-37 tie. After that, the Rockets added seven into halftime with a 50-50 tie.

Parish, the 7-foot Celtic center, hit three jumpers against Malone early in the first period before the Rockets switched defensive assignments, putting 6-11 forward Billy Paultz on Parish.

But Paultz quickly picked up three personal fouls and Houston had to go back to Malone, and he committed his third personal with 4:46 left in the second quarter. Malone stayed in the game for the remainder of the half, however, and was able to avoid further trouble. He finished the first half with 10 points and nine rebounds, including five off the offensive boards — where Houston enjoyed Dunleavy scored 13 of his points in Houston's big third quarter, during which the Rockets continued to outrebound the Celtics, this time by 12-8. And Boston was never able to mount much of a threat in the final period, managing just one field goal in the last 5 minutes.

Dibbs Holds Off Kirmayr, Wins Champions' Tourney

NEW YORK — Eddie Dibbs, playing nearly flawless tennis, won the tennis Tournament of Champions here Sunday, 6-3, 6-2 over Carlos Kirmayr.

Dibbs finally broke the Brazilian in the eighth game, then held serve to take the first set. The clay courst specialist almost was per-fect, making only six unforced er-rors and getting in 73 percent of his first serves.

Although Dibbs and Kirmayr took turns breaking each other in the first five games of the second set, Dibbs again proved his flawless precision — again committing only six unforced errors.

Kirmayr, who thrived all week long on the brink of elimination he made it to the finals by knocking off top-seeded John McEnroe. Angel Gimenez, No. 9 seed Balazs Taroczy and No. 5 Wojtek Fibak - fought off two match points. But Dibbs proved too steady, and Kirmayr succumbed on the third match-winner when his backhand

What is all this jazz?" Jazz is, of course, the immediate metaphoric source of the vogue verb "to bop." "Bop is an intransi-tive verb of motion that is not just a New York trend," says Frederick Mish, of Merriam-Webster. "We have citations on it going back to 1966, but its use has increased substantially in the last few years."

The earlier use was a jazzman's imitation of a sound: Lexicogra-pher Peter Tamony found a 1928 record using "bop" to describe a sound. Bop, rebop and bebop were onomatopoeie names for a complex jazz form using triadal chords: The second note was an octave higher and slightly ahead of the first and third, making a sound like ta-dah, de-dum, or be-bop.

Before jazz made the word its own, bop had a history of meaning a blow: "Dave the Dude," wrote Damon Runyon in his 1932 "Guys and Dolls," "reaches across the table and bops One-Eyed Solly right in the mouth." That sense of bop as a blow, imitating the sound of fist meeting mouth, akin to was recorded in a dictionary of Kentish dialect a century

Here is where language does its magie: "Bop" started as a sound imitating a blow, then it was adopted by musicians to mean a beat, perhaps from a percussion instrument; then "bop" absorbed the lilting connotations of a piece of music in progress, and oow fuses the sound with the musie: To "bop along," or "bop over," means to go in a carefree, swinging style.

Now that "bop" has been established as a merry slang synonym for an intransitive "go," what has happened to "go"? It has become a synonym for "say."

Dick Cavett, who brings a concern for language to the airwaves, was asking me, "Have you noticed the way 'he says' is out and 'he

I have. So has Ronald Butters of Duke University, writing in American Speech magazine about what he terms "the narrative go." Example of the new use of "go": "So George comes at Louis with the knife, and Louis goes, 'Don't cut

When did people start talking that way, or going like that? Butters cites a couple of meanings of "go" that border on "say": go over means "repeat" and go through means "discuss." But he believes that the origin of the narrative "go" so common in young people's slang today is in imitative interjections — "go bang!" — and in the introductory word to the imitation of an animal's sound: "The cow goes, 'moo.' The duck goes, 'quack.'"

He cites the nursery rhyme:

This little plg went to market This little pig stayed home This little pig had roast beef
And this little pig had none
And this little pig went, 'Wee-weewee,' all the way home.

"I do not mean to imply," writes Butters, "that Americans now under the age of 35 were so influenced by having their little piggies pulled that a semantic change re-sulted. My own little piggies were regularly and vigorously pulled in the early 1940s, but no such change took place. At the same time, however, the imitative use of go - present in the language for centuries — would seem in a more general way the most likely candidate for the source of the semantie extensioo.

Philadelphia Story

From Giant Clothespin to Wrong-Way William Penn, The City Is Bursting With Sculpture

By Carolyn Roessel United Press International

DHILADELPHIA - The taxi careened I around the corner and there it was, looming rust-colored 53 feet above the bustle of downtown Philadelphia.

"Gee, look at that big clothespin thing," the driver said with disgust. His passenger, the sculptor Claes Oldenburg, immediately confessed that he had fashioned Philadelphia's most notorious piece of art.

"You did that?" said the driver, slightly more impressed. "Well, at least it sin't a horse and rider."

The Oldenburg clothespin is one of more than 850 pieces of outdoor sculpture scat-tered through Philadelphia, the first city in the United States to pass legislation requiring some builders to pledge I percent of construction costs to public art.

Philadelphia has the first bronze cast of Rodin's tumultuous "Gate of Hell" (the second went to the Rodin Museum in Paris); Frederic Remington's "The Cowboy," the only large bronze piece ever made by the illustrator of the Old West; and Emmanuel Fremiet's stoie "Joan of Arc," now gilded.

"It's astonishing, and it's something that nobody really knows about," said Richard Boyle, chairman of the city Redevelopment Authority's Fine Arts Committee.

Unsung Collection

Forty U.S. cities have adopted 1-percent legislation such as that pioneered in Philadel-phia in 1959, but the city's unsung collection gol its start 87 years earlier with the Fair-mount Park Art Association, a group that used private donations to buy the 250 statues that dot the huge city park.

"Even in [New York's] Central Park there is not the collection of sculpture we have in Fairmount Park," said Janet Kardon, director of the University of Pennsylvania's Institute of Contemporary Art. If you took a bus tour through the park you could see the history of American sculpture in hving color."

The same year the Fairmount Park Art Association began its work, Alexander Milne Calder, the first of three generations of the famous Philadelphia sculpting family, began a 22-year task of transforming City Hall into what one art expert called a "bas relief sculp-

Calder carved more than 250 figures, ranging from symbolic images of the elements and four continents, to playful scenes from daily life — children playing marbles and a cat chasing a mouse. The finishing touch, a

37-foot statue of William Penn, weighing 26 tons, was hoisted to the top of the building in

"To grandfather's everlasting disappointment," wrote Margaret Calder Hayes, "as he watched helplessly from the ground his statue of Penn, the crowning piece of more than 20 years of labor, was mounted on the dome of City Hall facing the wrong way."

Lumpy Bronze Mass

Across from City Hall, in striking contrast, is a lumpy, twisted bronze mass of legs, arms, torsos and heads — Jacques Lipchitz's "Government of the People." The piece was arected in 1976 beside the city's Mumicipal Services Building water than 1976. vices Building under the 1-percent law. For-mer Mayor Frank L. Rizzo said the work "looked like some plasterers dropped a pile Oldenburg's clothespin and the enormous cracked button, 15 feet in diameter, that he plans to deliver to the University of Pennsylvania campus this spring, were commis-sioned under the 1-percent regulation for all public building projects or buildings con-structed on land cleared by the city Redevelopment Authority.

Proponents of the public sculpture say it enriches urban life. "I like the idea that the passer-by is surprised," Kardon said. "So many of the passers-by have never entered an art museum. Public sculpture is bringing art museum contents out into the street."

Four purple, red and green aluminum let-ters, LOVE, proved that Philadelphians who stream by the outdoor art actually notice it. Sculptor Robert Indiana loaned his LOV.E rendition to the city during the U.S.

When that was removed there was a fantastic public outcry. It was amazing. Ordinary people had come to like it, to accept it there," Boyle said. F. Eugene Dixon, owner of the Philadelphia 76ers basketball team, fi-nally stepped in with $35,000 to purchase the sculpture for the city.

Voluntary Purchases

Since the 1-percent law was instituted, several private developers not subject to the city's public art regulations have voluntarily purchased public sculpture.

Jack McDermott, senior vice president of the Radnor Corp., said he was surprised by the response the firm received when it asked the city Art Commission to critique a $125,000 bronze statue proposed for a large downtown office building.
The 174-foot sculpture, "The Family," depicted a couple and two small children, all

Oldenburg's clothespin.

"I was surprised to hear one of the Art Commission members saying he didn't want to be responsible for introducing nudity in art to Philadelphia," MeDermott said. "There's oudity all over Philadelphia as far as art is concerned.

Pope John Paul II celebrated mass from a platform built over one such sculpture, the Fountains of Rivers by second-generation Alexander Stirling Calder.

Laws requiring that a certain percent of building costs be spent on public art are nat-urally a vital support to sculptors. "If you removed that kind of incentive it would be very hard to get sculpture up," Oldenburg said. "Philadelphia has so much sculpture because it has that incentive."
